LIST OF CONTRIBUTORS

Brett Bebbler is Assistant Professor of History at Old Dominion University. He is the author of Violence and Racism in Football: Politics and Cultural Conflict in British Society, 1968–1998 (Pickering & Chatto, 2012) and the editor of Leisure and Cultural Conflict in Twentieth-Century Britain (Manchester University Press, 2012). He teaches and writes on a variety of topics in postwar Europe, including race, migration, human rights, leisure and popular culture.

Justin Bengry is a historian of sexuality and capitalism in modern Britain. He completed a PhD in History and Feminist Studies in 2010 at the University of California, Santa Barbara, after which he was the first Elizabeth and Cecil Kent Postdoctoral Fellow in British History at the University of Saskatchewan and an SSHRC Postdoctoral Fellow in History at McGill University. Justin is currently an Honorary Research Fellow at Birkbeck College, University of London. His research has appeared in History Workshop Journal, Media History and in Brian Lewis's edited collection British Queer History: New Approaches and Perspectives (2013). He is currently completing a monograph titled The Pink Pound: Capitalism and Homosexuality in Twentieth-Century Britain.

Kelly Boyd is Senior Research Fellow at the Institute of Historical Research, School of Advanced Study, University of London. In addition to her monograph, Manliness and the Boys' Story Paper in Britain: A Cultural History, 1855–1940 (Palgrave Macmillan 2003), she has written on the early history of television in Britain, issues of Americanization, and masculinity, most recently in Media History. With Rohan McWilliam, she edited The Victorian Studies Reader (Routledge, 2007). From 2004–10, she served as Treasurer of the Social History Society of the UK and is currently reviews editor of Cultural and Social History.

Mark J. Crowley is Associate Professor and Early Career Hubei Provincial ‘Chu Tian’ Scholar at Wuhan University, China. He has published numerous articles on nineteenth-century British Trade Unionism, Welsh Nationalism, Devolution in Wales, and women’s employment in World War II. He is currently completing a monograph on women’s employment in the British Post Office during World War II, and is editing (with Sandra Dawson) a volume on the Home Front in Britain and the Empire during World War II.

Paul R. Deslandes is an Associate Professor and Chair of the Department of History at the University of Vermont, where he has taught since 2004. He is the author of Oxbridge Men: British Masculinity and the Undergraduate Experience, 1850–1920 (Indiana University Press, 2005) as well as a variety of articles and essays on the history of British education, masculinity, sexuality and the history of the body. He is currently completing a new book titled The Culture of Male Beauty in Britain: From the First Photographs to David Beckham.

Peter Gurney teaches British Social History at the University of Essex. Gurney has published widely on the history of consumption and working-class culture, including Co-operative Culture and the Politics of Consumption in England, 1870–1930 (Manchester, 1996) named ‘Outstanding Academic Title’ in 1997 by Choice, journal of the American Library Association. His latest book, Wanting and Having: Popular Politics and Liberal Consumerism in England, 1830–70, is forthcoming (Manchester University Press, 2015).

Kenneth Mouré is Professor of History at the University of Alberta. His previous works include Managing the Franc Poincaré: Economic Understanding and Political Constraint in French Monetary Policy, 1928–1936 (Cambridge University Press, 1991) and The Gold Standard Illusion: France, the Bank of France and the International Gold Standard, 1914–1939 (Oxford University Press, 2002). His current research explores French experience with economic controls, black markets and consumption during and after World War II, with recent articles in French History, French Historical Studies and The Journal of Contemporary History.

Bianca Murillo is Assistant Professor of History at Willamette University in Salem, Oregon. Her research and teaching interests include modern Africa, the history of global capitalism, comparative consumer cultures, and critical race and gender studies. Her research has been published in Africa, Enterprise & Society and Gender & History, and she is a recent recipient of the prestigious 2013–14 Woodrow Wilson Career Enhancement Fellowship. Her book, Conditional Sales: Global Commerce and the Making of an African Consumer Society is forthcoming in 2016 with Ohio University Press.

Erika Rappaport is Associate Professor of History at the University of California, Santa Barbara. She is the author of Shopping for Pleasure: Women in the Making of London's West End (Princeton University Press, 2000) and numerous chapters and articles on gender, urban history, consumer culture and imperialism in The Journal of British Studies, Victorian Studies, Gender and History and History Workshop, among others. She is currently completing An Acquired Taste: Tea and the Global History of an Imperial Consumer Culture (Princeton University Press, 2016) a study that uses tea to explore how the histories of consumer culture and empire intersected between the seventeenth and twentieth centuries, contributing a fresh interpretation to the modern history of globalization.

Stefan Schwarzkopf is an Associated Professor in History at Copenhagen Business School, Denmark. He works on the history of advertising and other forms of persuasive communication in the commercial sphere. Schwarzkopf has a particular interest in the history and ideological underpinnings of market and consumer research.

Penny Tinkler is a senior lecturer in Sociology at the University of Manchester. She has written extensively on the history of girls and young women, popular magazines, the feminization of smoking, photography and photographic methods. Her books include: Constructing Girlhood: Popular Magazines for Girls Growing Up in England 1920–50 (Taylor & Francis, 1995), Smoke Signals: Women, Smoking and Visual Culture in Britain 1880–1980 (Berg, 2006) and Using Photographs in Social and Historical Research (Sage, 2013).

Sandra Trudgen Dawson is Acting Assistant Director of Programming and Communications, Honors Program, Northern Illinois University. She is author of Holiday Camps in Twentieth-Century Britain: Packaging Pleasure (Manchester University Press, 2011) and several chapters and articles on popular culture, leisure, consumption and gender history. She is currently working on Empire at the Bedside: Commonwealth Nurses and the Making of the British National Health Service.

Ina Zweiniger-Bargielowska is Professor of Modern British History at the University of Illinois, Chicago. She is author of Austerity in Britain: Rationing, Controls and Consumption, 1939–1955 (Oxford University Press, 2000) and Managing the Body: Beauty, Health and Fitness in Britain, 1880s–1939 (Oxford University Press, 2010).

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

Numerous personal and academic debts are accumulated when compiling a volume such as this. While each contributor has acknowledged those who have assisted in the writing process, we would like to also mention a few names. From the inception of this project, the assistance of those at Bloomsbury Academic, especially Jennifer Schmidt, Louise Butler, Molly Beck and Abbie Sharman have been invaluable. The contributors to the volume also deserve mention for their excellent essays and their patience in dealing with the endless email correspondence from the three of us living in three time zones.

The task of completing this volume was only possible because of the unstinting support of our families, especially our spouses. Mark would like to thank Juan (Maggie) for her love, companionship, friendship and unwavering support, especially in the nine months leading up to the birth of their daughter Anna. Her arrival on 10 October 2014 comes with the hope that she, like us, will be informed and inspired by the experiences of those studied in this volume. Erika would like to thank Jordan, Andy and Ben for their good humour and help, as she has been finishing several projects at once. Sandra would like to thank Patrick and Anna for their love and support through multiple surgeries and providing the distraction she needed to be able to write.

We would also like to acknowledge those who lived through and experienced much of the life-changing episodes examined here, our parents and grandparents whose life-spans this volume encompasses. Mark would like to dedicate this volume to his grandfather, Joseph Benjamin Crowley, who fought for Britain during World War II and his grandmother, Megan Crowley. Mark continues to be inspired by his only surviving grandparent Jacqueline Brooks, who shared with him her experiences of the Post Office Savings Bank during World War II. Sandra would like to dedicate this volume to her grandfather, Albert Henry Trudgen, a working man whose life spans the entire timeline of this volume. Born in 1895, he received few years of schooling; worked as a farm labourer; fought in World War I; took post-war work as a tin miner in Cornwall; laid roads in Scotland in the 1930s; raised a family during the depression years; endured a second war and wrote to his grandchildren every week and finally died in 1989. Erika would like to dedicate this volume to her parents, Ann and Stuart Rappaport, who experienced World War II from the relatively safe vantage point of Detroit and Los Angeles. They were the teenagers who enjoyed coffee shops and organized sports and yet acquired a critical stance on the American consumer society they were lucky enough to enjoy.
